To those in power:

The entire system of "Antitrust" law is an abomination, and should be repealed and eliminated forever. "Antitrust" amounts to nothing more than punishing production because it is production. If you want a detailed argument for this position, read Chairman Alan Greenspan's article, "Antitrust", in the book, Capitalism: The Unknown Ideal. (Rand, Ayn, editor. New York: The New American Library, Inc., 1967, p. 63-71.)

Because "Antitrust" is in principle a moral and economic equivalent of poison, we should have as little of it as possible. Microsoft has done nothing wrong, and is a paragon of production. So be as lenient on Bill Gates and his associates as you have the courage and integrity to be. If you have a choice between punishing Microsoft and losing your job, think of another line of work. It will be better for the world, for America, and for your own souls.

Sincerely,
Ben Steinhart, M.A.
